A day in the life of Olympic College student, Annika Large, can be hectic. She describes it as an “organized chaotic rush.”

A typical day consists of rushing out the door in the morning with her three young boys and dropping them off at school and daycare before coming to work at the college. She works until its time to pick up her children, then returns to campus where she studies before meeting her husband, Chad Large, who is a student in the welding program. From there, Annika hands off the kids and heads to attend her first class in the early evening.

Her experience is not unlike that of other OC students.

Today, Annika is in her final year of the Organizational Leadership and Technical Management (OLTM) bachelor’s degree program, and on track to graduate this spring.

There are numerous reasons why she is succeeding: persistence, support and opportunity to name a few. One such opportunity is the OLTM program, which uses a hybrid in-person and online format where classes meet two- to three-times a week in the evening.

“For my classmates specifically and for me also, most of us have full-time jobs, or are parents or have other obligations during the day. Having night classes enables us to get an education,” she said.

She’s also taken advantage of the many services OC has to offer. She participated in the WorkFirst program, which provides financial assistance for tuition, fees and books to students who qualify.

Eventually she learned of OC’s Career Center, where students can pursue employment opportunities at the college. It’s a convenient way to earn additional income, without having to leave campus. Through the Career Center, Annika landed a job in Records & Registration, where she worked for two and a half years.

Her message to individuals thinking about going back to school – “Don’t hold yourself back.”

“There is support everywhere on campus, no matter what your barrier is,” she said.

Now Annika is putting the leadership skills she’s learning to work here on campus. She accepted a leadership role as the Vice President of Equity and Student Support for the Student Government of Olympic College, and is learning more about the administrative side of the college.

Annika has an eye to the future as she nears completion of her bachelor’s degree and is considering a master’s degree program at Central Washington University.

A growing demand

OC recently launched an Evening Associate Degree Schedule, which increases access to college for students who, like Annika, have commitments that prevent them from attending by day.

Students in the evening schedule can earn their associate degree in two years, attending classes one night a week on Tuesdays at the Bremerton campus. Those who complete the program earn an Associate in Arts, Direct Transfer Agreement (AA-DTA), designed for graduates who plan to continue at a state university.

The beauty of OC’s evening AA-DTA schedule is that you can start any quarter. The program uses a hybrid model where some classes meet face-to-face, while others meet online. A typical schedule goes from 5–9:30 p.m. on Tuesdays. In addition, the College provides support services on Tuesdays until 7 p.m., for anyone who needs assistance with registration, financial aid, advising and more.

Winter quarter classes include English Composition 1, Black Voices in America and Introduction to Sociology. In spring, students take Human Nutrition, Intro to Business and Composition II.

If you’re considering going to college, but unsure because of the time commitment, give us a call to see if the evening associate degree schedule will work for you!

Olympic College President, Dr. David Mitchell, retires after 15 years at the College

Olympic College President, Dr. David Mitchell retires on Dec. 31 after more than 44 years working in the community college system. We met for a discussion about his experiences serving as a president, administrator and professor.

What is it about the community college system that attracted you and kept you all these years?

The open access mission of community colleges is uniquely American and other countries are starting to embrace the idea that anyone can seek a postsecondary education. The effect you have on individuals is so impactful. You can take a person from where they are, and move them to a completion of a certificate or degree, and a profound change in their life.

I taught at universities and they have an outstanding mission. Sometimes, university students have many opportunities at their doorstep. Whereas, community colleges create opportunities that would not otherwise be there.

At OC in particular, the “community” aspect of community college, and the impact this college has on the local community is profound. When you look at all of the partnerships we've established, it makes it enriching to work in a place that means so much to the community and is part of the reason why I've stayed. In addition, it is fun and rewarding to work in an environment where people are going to college, and have made a conscious decision to improve their lives.

What are highlights that stand out to you during your time in the community college system?

The movement to provide more access to baccalaureate degrees for local residents is amazing. We were one of the first six community colleges in the state to offer baccalaureates, and now there are more than sixty different baccalaureates. There are literally hundreds and hundreds of students earning baccalaureate’s, most of whom would not have received it without the availability of local access through their community college.

The partnerships we have with universities are crucial. Where it doesn’t make sense for OC to provide the baccalaureate, we've partnered with universities like WSU and Western. There are scores of engineers in Kitsap County who are working in this field because the pathway from an associate degree in engineering at OC, to WSU's bachelor degree is available locally.

We've had some tremendous opportunities for new capital projects as well, totaling $160 million in the past 15 years that have transformed our campuses.

Seeing community colleges rise to prominence nationally – hearing U.S. Presidents from both parties talk about community colleges is exciting. Fifteen years ago, you rarely heard about community colleges. The reputation and credibility rises every year and that is a very good trend.

What are some things that have remained constant?

What has changed?

One thing that has remained constant, and I hope always will, is the open access. It's what makes it uniquely American and community colleges have stuck to that mission.

Some things that have changed are the financial climate, the regulatory climate, compliance, and demographics. All of these elements are coming together to make a very different environment in which community colleges function. We haven’t figured out yet, quite how to adapt to it. That’s what the Olympic College Adaptation Project is all about – how do we get out in front and be proactive as opposed to being reactive?

The changing environment is not going back to the way it was. In my mind, the business model for community colleges is somewhat broken and we cannot continue to raise tuition to solve the financial problems. Those pressures have always been there, but never to the extent they are now.

Is there a message you would like to share with the community?

I'm grateful to have the opportunity to live and work in this community and be at a college that is regarded so highly, and has so much credibility with local community members. It really is unique. You don't usually find that kind of relationship unless you are in a rural community, and we are in the upper third in terms of size among the 34 community colleges in Washington.

I appreciate the opportunity to work with the employees and faculty of the college who are so dedicated to the mission.

Our students here are great. You could not find better students. They are here for a purpose; they have a goal in mind and want to improve their lives. It’s an awesome responsibility for the college to deliver on our mission – to help people improve their lives through education.

During his time at the college, approximately 30,000 students have completed a degree or certificate. Thank you Dr. Mitchell for your years of service to this college and our communities.
