It is the policy of Washington’s community and technical colleges to provide equal opportunity in education regardless of race, ethnicity, creed, color, national origin, sex, marital status, sexual orientation, age, religion, genetic information, gender identity, veteran status or the presence of any sensory, mental, or physical disability.

Stormy seas may be on the horizon for the local workforce as waves of managers and employees inch closer to retirement.

This so-called “Gray Wave” of baby boomers — those born between 1946 and 1964 — account for more than 75 million Americans. Retirement numbers, which stalled during the Great Recession, are starting to climb as the economy recovers.

Fortunately Olympic College is helping to weather that storm and fill the talent gap through two new four-year degree programs that are training the next generation of leaders right here in Kitsap County.

Bachelor’s degree programs in Applied Science in Information Systems (BAS IS), and Applied Science in Organizational Leadership and Technical Management (OLTM) provide students with the experience, training and education they need to compete for jobs in growing fields.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor reports that job growth in information technology (IT) fields is at 24 percent here in Washington, well above the national rate of 14 percent. An occupational report for Kitsap and Mason counties projects more than 300 new IT job openings by 2022.

According to Norma Whitacre, Dean of the College’s Business and Technology Division and the administrator for the new programs, the timing couldn’t be better for establishing the Information Systems and Organizational Leadership bachelor’s programs.

“These programs fill a proven need for managers and IT professionals and Olympic College is proud to bring these opportunities to our community,” she said. “We have outstanding faculty who are committed to student success and the success of the new programs.”

The Information Systems degree was launched last year and will enroll its second group of students this fall. Organizational Leadership just started accepting applications for its first group of students to start fall quarter.

Clear Pathways to Enrollment
Both programs are designed for students with a range of professional technical associate degrees, work experiences, and professional goals. They dovetail nicely with Information Systems Specialists, Organizational Leadership and Resource Management Associates in Applied Science – Transfer (AAS-T) programs already in place at Olympic College.

As an open-door college, these programs are not limited to current Olympic College students. Anyone who meets the minimum qualifications and is interested in earning their four-year degrees locally should apply for these programs.

Designed for Working Students
For working professionals, the thought of earning a bachelor’s degree may seem daunting. The majority of BAS IS and OLTM classes are offered at night allowing students to continue working while pursuing their degrees. A hybrid-model is used for each program which means classes are available online and in-person.

Dr. Philip Mathew is the faculty lead for the OLTM bachelor’s program and thinks students will really appreciate this model.

“We anticipate many of our students will be working. This allows them to pursue a bachelor’s degree at a time and in a way that is convenient for them,” he said.

The hybrid-model offers all of the convenience of online courses with all of the resources available on campus.

Students Advance Together
The BAS IS and OLTM programs use a cohort model where students enter programs and advance through them together. The cohort model helps students bond with their classmates while preparing them for team-based work environments.

“It creates a social learning experience where students can build connections through shared experiences,” Mathew said.

It all goes back to teamwork. Building and managing teams is a critical need in the workplace, particularly in the tech industry, where diverse skills and backgrounds are needed to complete complex projects.”

Applied Sciences, Active Learning
Perhaps the most interesting aspect of these programs are the unique classes and learning environment.
For example, in the BAS IS program students learn concepts like database management, programming and web development. Organizational Leadership students receive instruction in subjects like high performance teams, business finance and process improvement. Students in both programs learn project management, business statistics and communications and have the opportunity for personalized senior capstone projects.

Because these programs are applied sciences, students must take the lessons they learn, and use them to create functioning projects that become part of their electronic portfolios.

“With applied sciences, students get the theory behind the topics then create working projects,” said Information Systems lead faculty Richard Becker. “It’s more than just being lectured to on a topic. Students are challenged to apply the skills they acquire.”

Many of the classes are taught in a state-of-the-art active classroom. It features a roundtable in the center of the room where students and faculty meet for brainstorming sessions. Branching off from the roundtable are tree-shaped tables where teams sit together. Each seat has a computer that rises from the desk.

Beyond the Basics
Both courses were developed with significant input from the community. Advisory committees were formed and visioning workshops were held with faculty from several colleges with programs already in place, industry leaders, and student representatives. Industry roundtables were held in Kitsap and Mason counties and at Puget Sound Naval Shipyard to ensure the programs responded to local and regional workforce needs.

This process revealed a strong desire to go beyond the basics to offer students a well-rounded education that would prepare them for the diversity and challenges that exist in a modern work environment.

The OLTM program includes a focus on occupational safety which came about through feedback received at the visioning sessions and advisory committee meetings. Workplace injuries are a huge liability for businesses. This background will give graduates the skills they need to manage programs that aim to reduce on-the-job injuries.

Through courses like Industrial/Organizational Psychology students gain a foundation for addressing critical workplace issues such as employee training and organizational development, performance measurement, and workplace motivation.

Commitment to Diversity
Another unique class in the OLTM program is Applied Anthropology. Anthropology is a social science that studies all aspects of humans. It takes methodologies used in the study of human behavior and applies them to help solve real world problems.

According to anthropology professor Caroline Hartse, companies like Microsoft use applied anthropology to involve the community and collect their feedback when designing new products.

“Having applied anthropology is a strength and benefit to this program and will help to give it a global perspective when considering the diversity that exists in the workplace,” she said. “It is a holistic approach that promotes understanding of differing points of view.”

Dr. Mathew adds, “We think this program will attract students from diverse cultural and professional backgrounds. Diversity is a key strength to any organization because a good team needs diverse backgrounds. And a good leader knows how to identify and manage those attributes.”

This diverse worldview is a key component that uniquely qualifies graduates of these programs to fill a growing demand locally and globally.

So as more and more jobs become available, Olympic College is creating new waves of highly capable workers to keep the ships of industry afloat.

"These programs fill a proven need for managers and IT professionals and Olympic College is proud to bring these opportunities to our community.”

1. Schedule to meet with your advisor before completing 15 credits.
2. Prepare an academic plan (MAP). A faculty advisor must approve it before students complete 45 credits.*

* Students that reach 45 credits without completing an education plan will be blocked from registration. Learn more at www.olympic.edu/Advising.

Contact your faculty advisor and schedule your appointment early to avoid the rush.
